

BULLDOG BUILT PARTICIPANT JOURNAL

BULLDOG BUILT INITIATIVE

Welcome to the Bulldog Built Initiative! This program is designed to test, reward, and enhance your fitness, regardless of where you fall on your “fitness journey”. By participating in the Bulldog Built Initiative, you’ve chosen to take a big step toward moving the needle forward in your overall health. This program will reveal areas in which you are weak, highlight your physical strengths, and provide a base from which you can learn to develop fitness over your lifetime (not just for Spring Break). Throughout the Bulldog Built Initiative, you’ll be able to log your progress, see how you stack up against your friends in your physical capacity, and achieve rewards based on your skill level.

How does it work?

At its most basic, the Bulldog Built Initiative is a series of tests designed to evaluate your physical skills. Specifically, the program is comprised of 14 tests based around the 10 General Physical Skills: Endurance, Stamina, Strength, Balance, Speed, Power, Agility, Coordination, Flexibility, and Accuracy. These tests were selected based on their applicability to the 10 General Physical Skills, and the test standards are based on national norms for average individuals. Participants can choose 3 individual tests to complete on any given day, and each test may be performed only once per week. All tests will be supervised and scored by Campus Recreation employees, and participants will be given the opportunity to log each attempt within their Participant Journal (the document you hold in your very hands). Depending upon how you perform, you will be awarded either Bronze, Silver, or Gold for each test. Once you achieve Bronze in each of the tests of the 10 Physical Skills, you will become a Bronze Member of the Bulldog Built Initiative, complete with all of the prizes and privileges thereof. In order to become a Silver Member and unlock a new level of prizes and perks, you must achieve Silver status in each of the tests. Likewise, in order to achieve the coveted Gold Member status, you must score Gold in each test. See below for full Prize Package details. We consider Bronze to be achievable by most typical college students, and we regard it as the baseline of health. We consider those who achieve Silver to be significantly “above average” in their physical competency; these individuals are fit, healthy, and capable. Finally, we believe that the Gold category accurately represents those who have achieved a “Gold Standard” of health; these individuals are athletic to an elite degree

How does it help?

You might be thinking to yourself, “So this is just a bunch of tests? How can this help me improve my overall fitness?” We’re so glad you asked! The tests themselves serve a greater purpose beyond simply providing you with a score. Allow us to explain: your scores indicate your current fitness level in general (like a snapshot of your health at the moment). Some participants will be shocked to find that, overall, they are not as fit as they thought they were! We in the Department of Campus Rec believe that, in order for a person to call him- or herself “fit,” he or she must prove that they can perform well across each of these Physical Skills. Being incredibly adept within one or two categories of fitness does not make a person “fit,” but rather it makes them a “specialist” within their areas of interest. For those interested in becoming a fitter human, breadth of skill is just as important as depth of skill. Thus, the diverse tests within the Bulldog Built Initiative will highlight where you may have overemphasized your training and what areas in which you stand to improve. This will allow you to build your own personal “Roadmap to Fitness,” a birds-eye view of your current fitness levels combined with the knowledge of where you need to improve.

Furthermore, the tests selected to examine specific areas of your physical fitness themselves also serve to enhance your fitness in those areas. This specificity will show you how to train in order to improve your scores in the areas in which you are weak. For instance, imagine you find that you’re a competent runner (maybe you reach “Silver” on your first attempt at the Endurance Challenge), but not as adept at upper body stamina (perhaps you couldn’t achieve “Bronze” in the Push-up Challenge). In this instance, you likely wouldn’t need to pour too much more training into your running, but you may want to begin training more regularly for upper body stamina. To improve your push-up stamina, you can simply perform push-ups with regularity; thus, practicing the test will not only improve your score, but your overall upper body stamina in general as well. The test is both the assessment and the solution!

Finally, keeping a record of your performance on the tests within the Bulldog Built Initiative Participant Log will eventually paint a picture of your progress over time. You will finally have metric proof regarding whether or not your training is actually providing you with favorable results. This knowledge alone is invaluable for many of us who find ourselves in the gym wondering, “Is whatever I’m doing even really working? Is this doing anything at all?” We believe that, if you choose to stick with the Bulldog Built Initiative, your answer to that question will be an emphatic “Yes!”
